

Torre Diamante in the heart of Milano is with 130 m the tallest steel building in Italy. The use of high strength steel sections enables a low total weight, advantageous costs, less transport, slender columns and a preferred raft foundation. With long span composite floor beams flexible column-free offices and integrated building services can be realised. For the LEED certification the recycling-material steel played a major role.
(Foto: Bernhard Hauke)

Steel Construction 4

Volume 11
November 2018, No. 4
ISSN 1867-0520 (print)
ISSN 1867-0539 (online)

Wiley Online Library

<http://wileyonlinelibrary.com/journal/stco>

ECCS
CECM
EKS Journal for ECCS members

Ernst & Sohn
A Wiley Brand

www.ernst-und-sohn.de/steel-construction

Editorial

- 247 Frans Bijlaard, Milan Veljkovic, Gang Shi, Xuhong Qiang
Implementation of high-strength, high-performance steel structures

Articles

- 249 Sjors van Es, Henk Slot, Henri Steenberg, Johan Maljaars, Richard Pijpers
Use of HSS and VHSS in steel structures in civil and offshore engineering
- 257 Markus Feldmann, Simon Schaffrath
Application of damage theory to structures made from high-strength steels
- 264 Richard Stroetmann, Thoralf Kästner, André Hälsig, Peter Mayr
Influence of the cooling time on the mechanical properties of welded HSS-joints
- 272 Jennifer Spiegler, Ulrike Kuhlmann
Innovative high-strength steel construction using mixed connections
- 278 Cheol-Ho Lee, Seon-Hu Kim
Structural performance of CHS X-joints fabricated from high-strength steel
- 286 Gang Shi, Xuesen Chen
Research advances in HSS structures at Tsinghua University and codification of the design specification
- 294 Ana M. Girão Coelho, Frans Bijlaard
Moment-resisting joints in high-strength steel: areas for improvement in design standards
- 306 Sing-Ping Chiew, Yan-Qing Cai
Design of high-strength steel reinforced concrete columns – a Eurocode 4 approach

Regular Features

- 315 People
316 ECCS news
319 News
320 Events

A4 Products & Projects